

This is a play for people who have more.
You'll need a takeout menu, somewhere to donate, and another person.

This is a play for people who have more.

B
More than who?

Good question.

B
More of what?

Another good question.

B
How much is more?

A
“The answers you seek are within you.”

B
Some sort of roadmap to my within would be appreciated.

A
I'm hungry.

B
Don't change the subject.

A
Let me see the menu.

Here.

A
Are you hungry?

B
Now?

A
Yes.

B
I could eat. But we're coming back to this later.

A
Yes.

B
Here's an idea. I'm gonna close my eyes and point to something on the menu. You tell me if it looks good.

Okay.

B
How's this?

A Sure.

B
Okay, what about this one?

A
Yeah. Sure.

B
I need you to have more of an opinion.

Maybe.

B
Alright, we'll get one of those. You want to give this a try?

A Sure.

B
Just close your eyes and point.

A
Okay. How does this one look?

B
Bad.

A Bad?

B
Not for me.

A
I'll get it then.

B
So should we call it in? Can you pick it up?

A
Would you come with me to pick it up?

B
That feels like a trek.

A
It's not that far away.

B
It's the walking back in particular that takes it out of me. This is how it always goes. You're already hungry, so you go out to buy some food. And that's exciting because you're going to eat it. But you can't because you have to bring it back to wherever you came from to get the food in the first place. And you're carrying it. And the food smells so good. And it becomes this really labor-intensive thing of wanting to eat and of having the ability to eat but having to wait because you're not supposed to eat in your car or on the street or whatever. It's a trek.

A
Should I call it in?

B
Wait. Is there anything to drink around here?

A
Is that a joke?

B
Besides water.

A
I don't know.

B
You know what? I don't know if I'm hungry anymore.

A
That's disappointing.

B
Why?

A
I'd kind of geared up to spend the money. I'd gotten over the hump of feeling like it would be okay for me to part with twenty or thirty bucks.

B
I know what you mean.

A
It feels like a waste.

B
Are you hungry?

A
No.

B
We could just buy something else.

A
No, I'm not in a buying mood anymore.

B
You're in a spending mood?

A
Yeah. I've subtracted the money from the budget in my head already so I might as well.

B
So what would you suggest we do?

A
I could donate it.

B
You could. Will you?

A
I will.

B
To whom?

A

I keep a running list of places I could donate to. This happens a lot.

B

What does? Feeling like you've been boxed into having to spend money?

A

No, it's more specific. It's being in the mood for a meal but not really being hungry. My digestive system is very fickle.

B

How often does this happen to you?

A

Maybe once or twice a month.

B

And you just donate the money every time it happens?

A

Pretty much.

B

I guess I could do that too.

A

You could.

B

So where are you going to donate to?

A

I'm pulling up their website now.
